[From the (British) Northern Star] A SONG OF THE STARVING. BY RENEET FONDS. Now, bark ye on the highland, Now, bark ye in the glen, Throughout our fertile island, The song of starving men : There's honor for the waster While money's in his span ; There's plenty for the master : But there's nothing for the m here's wealth for building chu There's sood for bound and so fut the country is a desert. For the pauper in his need. Now, hark ye in the cottage, Now, hark ye in the mill, The people have the power, If they only had the will !

Let him still hug a fetter, Who breeks to be a slave, And calls the man a better He knows to be a know.

He knows to be a know. As long as yo will truckle, So long will dee sopress : Hope not to win from ables, Bat from gouradets - redress. Now, lark ye in the hall, Ye men of sheat makee ! And yo inser of bloody thrall !

Can ye face the judging nation, Ye that feasted on their pain, And made their desolation The foundation of your gain ?

Then down, each tarnished 'scutci And down, each blotted fame! The million paupers dying Cry shame upon you !- Shame fow, hark ye on the highland, Now, hark ye in the gien : temember that ye struggle With measures, not with men !

And he is not my brother By whom a wrong is done; Or visits on another What its would wish to shun.

Then, hark ye on the highland, And hark ye in the glen, Throughout our blessed island The song of stricken men.

The shipwrecked sailor wending To a haven of sure rest; The wounded bird descending On its lonely forest nest.

They feel no exultation, On earth, or air or sea, Like the gladness of a nation That has striven, and is free ?
